

Allowing the Sinclair group to
pre-empt programming
on all sixty-two of its stations to air
the clearly
political "Stolen Honor" documentary
strikes me as a
blatant flag
concerning the
failure of the FCC
to perform its basic
function; after all,
we can throw a hissy
fit over the Super Bowl debacle, and
yet a privately
owned company
somehow manages to
side-step the FCC?
What happened to the concept of equal
time? I don't understand the FCC's
lack of opinion on
the subject; how is
it permissible to allow this to be aired? while I
realize the political circumstances, I hardly think Republicans would turn the other cheek
if Fahrenheit 9/11
were to be shown on
all of the
ClearChannel
stations in America.
Where is the line
drawn?

I'm left holding my head, asking "what function does the FCC serve?" How can you explain
effectively
rendering yourselves
obsolete?
